

MARRIED FIFTY YEARS.

Jack J. Spalding, a leader at the bar, not only in Atlanta but in Georgia and the southeast, and Mrs. Spalding, will celebrate today the golden anniversary of their wedding.

Everyone will wish for them many more anniversaries that may be unmarred by illness or sorrow.

They are both in splendid health, younger than their years, and enjoy the companionship of hosts of close personal friends.

Most of the fifty years of this happy union have been spent in Atlanta.

Side by side they have helped in, and rejoiced at, the growth of the city almost from the dark days of reconstruction—growth not only in material things, but in the finer senses, involving the educational, cultural, social and spiritual life of the people.

No couple, among the pioneers of Atlanta, have been more outstanding as factors in the finer developments of the city.

Jack Spalding not only honors the great profession of law but for more than a generation has stood out prominently as one of the ablest lawyers of the south.

He is of untiring energy, of unchallenged integrity, and enjoys a great and remunerative practice by reason of his superior qualifications, and of his devotion to the interests of his clients.

In all of the busy years of a long and useful professional life he has found time for unselfish, constructive service in every worth-while undertaking for the welfare of Atlanta and all the people.

He has been active in his church, in civic affairs, in benevolence, in upbuilding, in character-making, in city building.

The impress of his great ability, and big heart, have been stamped upon every activity that tended toward the building of Atlanta, and the progress and development of Georgia.

Fifty years of unbroken home life—of unsullied devotion! What a record! What an inspiration!

The Constitution joins the hosts of other friends in greetings on this happy occasion, and wish for them a merry Christmas, a happy new year, and many other wedding anniversaries in the years to come.
