

MRS. JACK J. SPALDING.

On the fifty-first anniversary of her marriage, Mrs. Jack J. Spalding, one of Atlanta's most beloved women, passed on, thus terminating through death a long marital union that had been marked, through the more than half a century, by love, confidence, and sweetness of character.

The death of Mrs. Spalding, whose distressed husband has been for years and is one of the most outstanding men of the Georgia bar, and a most useful and progressive citizen, carries deep sorrow into the hearts of thousands of friends.

The Spalding home has been the center of culture and of close friendship. Mrs. Spalding took an active interest in spiritual, educational, cultural and social activities. She was, from the day of marriage to Mr. Spalding, on December 19, 1877, an inspiration, and a help-mate, indeed, to her husband. He has never failed to give her credit for his professional success, and for the beauty of their domestic life.

Mr. and Mrs. Spalding have lived in Atlanta since 1882. They are pioneers of the new Atlanta, and no couple has, singly in their different ways, and in teamwork, accomplished more in making the city great in things that are worth while.

We join the multitude of other friends in extending every condolence to the bereaved husband and family.
